

A few months ago a certain young mining engineer, a recent graduate of a prominent eastern university, came to Salt Lake and obtained a position at one of the nearby mines. Being of good family, and well regarded, and also having been a fellow student with a number of other well known young mining engineers of Salt Lake, he was soon in the social swim, where he at once distinguished himself by falling in love with one of the reigning belles. It was a bad case on his part, at least, but he did not long "let concealment, like a worm in the bud, feed on his damask cheek." Not he! Not long since he received a telegraphic offer of a more lucrative position elsewhere and he accepted.

Now was his last opportunity to reveal his love for the lady in question. He sought the aid of one of the society matrons and asked her what course to pursue, having fully explained to her the desperate nature of his ailment. She told him if he loved the young woman he must go and tell her so. He hardly had the courage to do that, but would she not help him to write a letter setting forth the case to the adored one? Certainly she would, and she did, and the letter was duly dispatched. Several days passed and no answer came. Time was getting short; soon he would have to "go away forever." He called at the home of the young woman determined to brave even a father, but all were out. At length, in desperation he seized a postal card and simply wrote, "Answer, yes or no," on it, mailed it to her. And he is still wondering.

There are more inconveniences connected with this matter of keeping a dress suit at the club than one would suppose. One of Salt Lake's leading social light and a well known politician follows the custom of keeping a dress suit down town so that he can make a hurry up social appearance any day in the week. Thursday evening, having donned this suit and its appendages, he sallied forth, or words to that effect, and sought the bosom of his family for the purpose of conveying the other half of the family to the inaugural ball. When the ball was ended he went home with his wife and entirely overlooked the fact that his "other" business suit was at the tailor's undergoing its weekly pressing. Consequently, dwellers in the north-eastern part of the city were regaled Friday morning with the sight of a well known man on his way down town, "presenting every evidence of having been out all night. He swears that no one shall ever inveigle him into such a position again.

And speaking of clubs, what a funny lot of things happened in regard to them during the past week. One well-dressed man was approached by another at the inaugural ball Thursday evening, just as he was talking to the wife of the former and, making a pretext of speaking in an aside, the newcomer said: "Say, F. Green, the haberdasher asked me to tell you to be down with that suit early tomorrow with $2.50." Before the man attacked could make reply, (and a pretty quick too) the wife of the other fellow spoke up saying, "Never mind, Mr. H. —, probably Green told him that when he was getting the one he has on."

Considerable comment was excited last year by the rumor that at least one of the smart matrons of the town had announced that hereafter she was to be armed with a book of etiquette. If there ever was need of such a book it is today in Salt Lake society, and it would doubtless find a ready sale if handled judiciously, even by an agent. It would seem that guests take it that there is a charm about uncertainty which extends even to the hostess never knowing till she sees her guests appear at a luncheon or a dinner whether or not she is to enjoy the pleasure of their company. Now uncertainty in certain lines is all very well, but when it comes to placing a number of plates for guests, it loses its charm.

Although debutante affairs are not at all the rage in Salt Lake, one need not wonder at that. Most of the debutantes are merely ready to be introduced when announcement parties are the order.

Two of the most popular girls in the state have caused a lot of mourning today by the simple luncheons given yesterday.

CURRENT EVENTS IN SOCIAL CIRCLES

The announcement of the engagement of Miss Gertrude Mayer, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Isadore Mayer, and Charles Cain Crismon, was made yesterday at a large luncheon given at the Commercial club, and formal announcement cards will be sent by mail to other friends today. The luncheon took place in the green dining room at the club, and twenty-four of the friends of Miss Mayer were the guests. The table was arranged in the form of a Maltese cross, the central part holding a high cut glass vase filled with pink roses. To the ends of the overhanging flowers were attached cupids which swung directly above the table. A handsome lace piece was beneath this, and concealed under its edges were the cards containing the combined monograms of the two young persons. Plumes sprang extended outward to the four arms of the cross, and each of these held a high cut glass candelabrum with green shades. At each place was a dainty basket filled with California violets, and pink roses were strewn over the cloth. Mrs. May-ett Buckingham assisted in entertaining the guests, who were Miss Darline Buckingham, Miss Helen Buckingham, Miss Pearl Savage, Miss Gertrude Mayer, Miss Sue Clark, Miss Stella Clark, Miss Allen Crismon, Miss Pearl Weller, Miss Carrie Spangston, Miss Stella McIntyre, Miss Lora Schoppe, Miss Crete Pinkerton, Miss Daisy Raybould, Miss Chella McCarty, Miss Nell Adams, Miss Chetty Wells, Miss Nell Cullen, Mrs. William H.
